Women's Day Message

We are celebrating National Women's Day this year, under the theme "The year of Charlotte Maxeke, the meaning of freedom under COVID-19". We commemorate this historic day amid the massive vaccination programme that the country is embarking on in the fight against the spread of the coronavirus (COVID-19).

Women today are faced with challenges that are not similar to those Women of 1956, but can still follow in the footsteps of this great religious leader, freedom fighter, the great human rights campaigner and the first black woman scientist in RSA.

Women must continue to do those seemingly small things that impact people's lives and have the determination to challenge the status quo. We must be able to contribute to the development of others, particularly women and children.

As women of today we can still emulate the selfless character of "mme Maxeke" and join hands to fight the many scourges that plague our economy and grow together as an honour to this great leader and stop dragging each other down.

Charlotte Maxeke had a dream for a gender-equal future. It is now upon all of us men and women to continue to work together towards the attainment of total generation equality.

As women, we are the ones who should be leading society to survive the many COVID-19 waves to continue honouring this great heroine of noble qualities. Let us mobilise and rally behind all women who are making positive strides in our communities. Let us all be COVID-WISE and register for vaccination.
